Live Not in Vain

He rowed his boat across the lake; he passed from shore to shore,

The ripple quickly disappeared; the lake was still once more.

Another built a bridge across to reach the other side;

He took the time to build it well, to make it strong and wide.

So all who followed after him, with thankful hearts, could say,

"A wise and faithful man has passed before us on the way."

When I have crossed the lake of life and stip on heaven's shore,

Will there remain some earthly sign that I have passed before?

Have I so lived that other men, who follow in my train,

Will find the way to heaven's shore, or have I lived in vain?
